Hondrond, October 21st, 1893. THE pacification of Tonkin appears to b nearly as far from realisation as it was five yeurs ago. A writer in the Avenir du Tonkin says that if a line be drawn passing through Moncay, Yenchau, Baclé, and Caobang it would demarcate the zone held permanently, as it were, by the Chinese. The posts which the French hold in this region are only isolated cases surrounded and blockaded for weeks past by invading bands, and their communications are in jeopardy. In advance of the Chinese different bands of pirates are at work, the names of which are duly set out by our contemporary, but the significance of the matter lies in the prominence given to what is termed the Chinese invasion. The complicity of the Chinese, our contemporary says, is established beyond all necessity of further proof, and as an instance of this complicity it is said that a Chinese Colonel has several times made an inspection of the bands holding Cai-kinh, has taken note of their effective force, which he bas had doubled on occasion, of the armament, which he has had increased where necessary, and man), and the Chinese Churches in connection satisfied. Bishop Raimondi was asked to was to repay the passage money advanced by first campaign who has sacrificed her fortane to the support of the pirate bands. More than this, it is contended that the Chinese residents in Tonkin are in league with the pirates, that a system of espionage has been established by which the pirates are kept informed of the movements of all the Europeans in the country, particularly those employed on the route between Phu-langthuong and Langson, as well as of the more- otherwise than in action, since 1815 were pub | Sang. If the French are not able to show better results than this from their occupation of Tonkin we cannot look for great, benefits from their occupation of the territory recently acquired on the left bank of the Mekong. But this recrudescence of piracy and the alleged irruption of Chinese across th border, happening almost coincidentally with the Franco-Siamese difficulty, is suggestive of some connection between the two matters. If China is really actively encouraging the elements of disorder in Tonkin she is pursuing a dangerous policy, which, if long coutinued, will be calculated to provoke French reprisals. The method of planting is somewhat ourious

I cannot find that it has been described by any one yet. The holes are about a foot-deep and 5 in ches broad and are not filled up when seedlings i are put in as in all other cultivations with which I am acquainted, instead of this a rift is scraped on either side of the lade at the top and young plant is plastered in it (the rift) and of the hole for shade. The nurseries re quire great care and attention at first, the seeds being so very linute that vitality is easily last, the Chinese even go so far as to say that if the man who; waters them has drunk spirits that day they will die; there may be something in this as the wafer is sometimes squirted from the mouth over the plants at first. Seedlings are not ready to plant out from the nurseries for from eight to ten months, so seedbads should be made in plenty of time beforehand. The first boiling, of 4.78 pinuls, sept forward by the Development Corporation was thus pro nounced upon by Messrs.
